PLANNED TO TAKE PLACE 6th APRIL 2019

WITH FUNDING FOR CHANGE INITIATIVES

Executive Overview of the Event

In the spirit of One Young World, the University of Bath will hold a “caucus” held in our on-campus facilities to bring together future young leaders to discuss solutions to some of the world’s most pressing challenges.

- ✓ The event will take place as a one day conference held on campus under agreement from One Young World with leading voices joining attendees to share ideas and engage in discussion around issues we face domestically and internationally.
- ✓ We plan for the event to be composed of a series of speaker talks discussing issues aligned with the One Young World values and UN Sustainable Development Goals.
- ✓ We currently foresee the event as taking place in early April 2019, ideally timed for maximum student engagement. The event will take advantage of the University of Bath’s modern conferencing spaces.
- ✓ The event has strong senior support from the University of Bath administration, and previous events have seen equally strong turnout from students, interested members of the local community, and One Young World Ambassadors located in the South-West.

Core Session Themes

The sessions of the One Young World Bath Caucus will focus on the UN SDGs along three lines: Sustainability & Environment, Health & Wellbeing, and Education & Inclusion.

One Young World Bath will Leave a Lasting Legacy

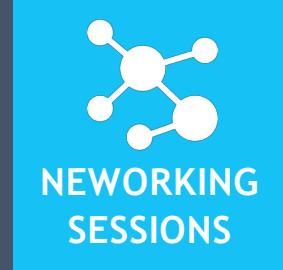

Project funding will be awarded to groups and ideas formed on the day of the conference, to help turn student's ideas for change into reality, creating a continuing legacy from the event.

Breakout Periods Will Help Enhance OYW Bath's Impact

Alongside providing structure and variety to the day, breakout sessions will enhance the event's objectives. The mid-morning break will enable attendee networking and lunch will provide a brainstorming opportunity.

Mid-Morning Networking

In addition to providing a natural pause to the speaker sessions, the mid-morning networking break will be focused on allowing attendees to network with one another and create their own teams for post-event initiatives.

Brainstorming Lunch

Lunchtime refreshments will be provided on-site to OYW Bath attendees in the format of a working lunch. Attendees will be supplied with guidance on identifying and forming initiative concepts whilst enjoying locally sourced food.

Target Audience

We want this to be an event for all young leaders, and will engage outside the University of Bath, with free tickets available to other local institutions including Bath College and Bath Spa University.

One Young World Bath will assemble future change-makers from the local region to hear from leading voices and innovate ideas to act on the Sustainable Development Goals

Although our programme for the One Young World Bath Caucus is still being shaped, we hope that the below proposed outline of the day will help you understand the format of the event.

Previous Bath Events Have Seen Major Success

The University has developed excellent know-how in running these events - meaning we can deliver the best experience to attendees and the highest confidence and reassurance to partners and speakers.

One Young World Bath Caucus 2017

The inaugural One Young World Bath conference was organised in 2017 by University of Bath students Emma Powell and Mohammad Lone, having been inspired at the 2016 Ottawa Summit.

Emma and Mohammad brought together speakers from the Summit with the student community to discuss key themes of peace and security, global education and business responsibility.

Keynote speakers and panelists included Fatima Zaman, from the Kofi Annan Foundation; Florence Broderick, Telefonica; Tom Fairburn, Bath alumnus and co-founder of The Baobab Network; Graeme MacKenzie, Vision for a Nation Foundation; and Prof. Andrew Crane, Director of the University's Centre for Business, Organisations and Society.

Other contributors included Alex Polkey, final year Politics and International Relations student, who in 2014 in Dublin became the youngest speaker at a One Young World summit.

One Young World Bath Caucus 2018

Over 100 University of Bath students and guests came together for One Young World Bath 2018, to focus on how young people can become future leaders and create positive social change.

Sophie Moody, the Faculty of Humanities & Social Sciences delegate to the Colombian Summit in 2017 and fellow Bath students hosted the conference which included speakers Duncan Millar, Children Change Colombia; David Spears, Circle of Young Intrapreneurs and returning guest Fatima Zaman, Kofi Annan Foundation and co-founder of Extremely Together.

Fernando Montano, Royal Ballet soloist performed a special dance in front of students, alumni and invited guests to the University, including the Colombian Ambassador to the UK, His Excellency Nestor Osorio. He then spoke about his background growing up in Colombia and his ongoing humanitarian work with children who suffer poverty, violence and exclusion.

One Young World Bath App

Attendees at One Young World Bath will benefit from a dedicated app for iPhone and Android smartphones, which will provide schedule information, speakers updates, and live notifications.

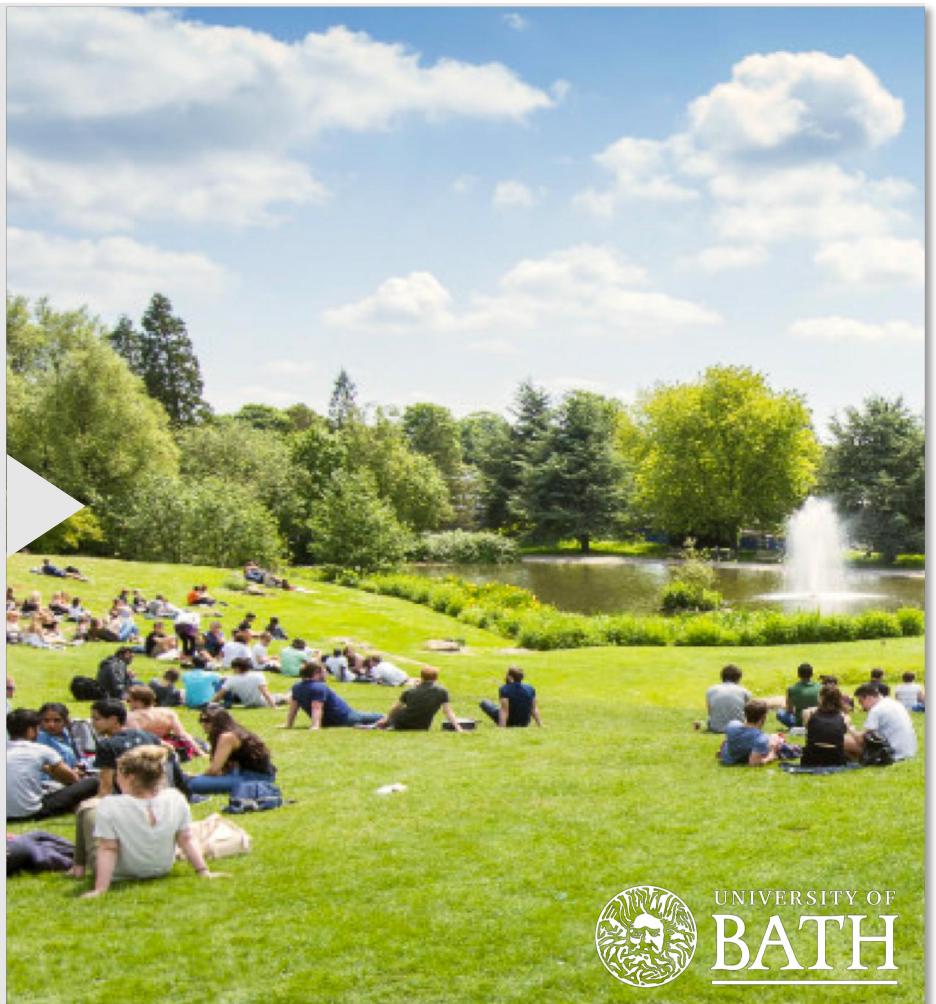

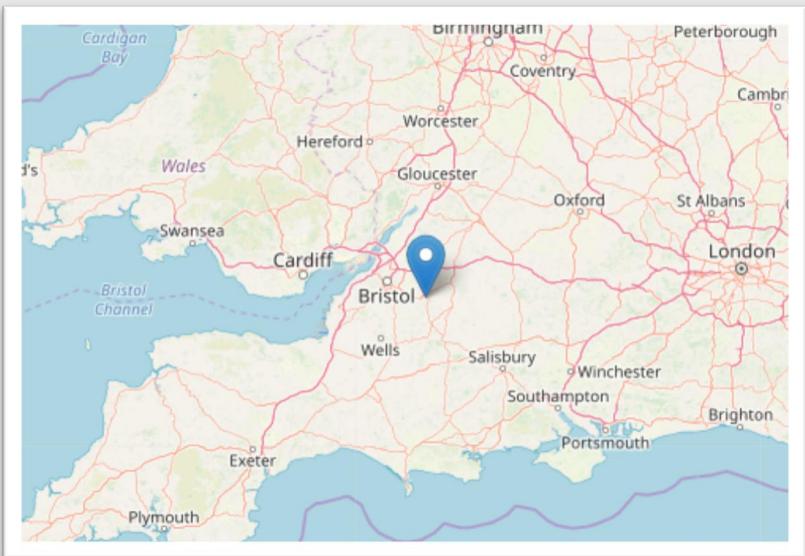

One Young World Bath has partnered with Thomson Reuters to deliver a bespoke smartphone-enabled event app for OYW Bath in April. The free “Convene” app for One Young World Bath attendees will take advantage of Thomson Reuters’ leading technology platform and information expertise, in addition to helping ensure we put the environment first with reduced paper usage and a lower carbon footprint.

APPENDIX: Blog Article - Previous Year's One Young World Bath Caucus

The 2nd Annual One Young World Bath Conference

On Saturday the 17th of March, we held at the University of Bath the 2nd annual One Young World Bath conference. Despite the snow, rain and wind, the weather didn't stop us in producing a fantastic day, with approximately 70 students, 3 societies, external speakers, staff, alumni, and members of the local community all in attendance.

We kicked off the day with some inspirational words from Bath academic Dr Jason Hart, who spoke on the unique relationship between mentor/mentee and recited words from the poem "This is Your Age" by Daisaku Ikeda, 2000. Dr Hart then kindly introduced our panel speakers for the day including Duncan Millar, who gave us an insight into his work as the Executive Director of the Charity "Children Change Colombia". Duncan explained a not so sugar-coated perspective of the struggles and challenges faced in promoting social change, and how a term such as "empowerment" appear positive to the development community. But in reality, the empowerment of one group results in the equal disempowerment of another, and this is practically much harder to achieve and advocate for in real-world development projects.

Our first keynote speaker for the day was Fatima Zaman, she is a member of the Kofi Annan Foundation and co-founder of Extremely Together. Fatima ran a workshop which she devised as part of the Extremely Together Roadshow, whereby she and her team travel the world bringing a workshop which focuses on countering extremism and terrorism. The interactive workshop forced students to think about how they perceive terrorists and come up with solutions to de-radicalization.

The attendees of the day then moved over to the STV (Sports Training Village), where they were joined by additional members of the community and Bath Alumni. The stage was stolen by Fernando Montano as he performed a piece called the "Golden Dove" which he choreographed himself, inspired by the peace deal agreed in Colombia in 2016. It was the first time the Golden Dove had been performed in Europe so it was truly an honour for Bath to be the venue to host such a historic performance.

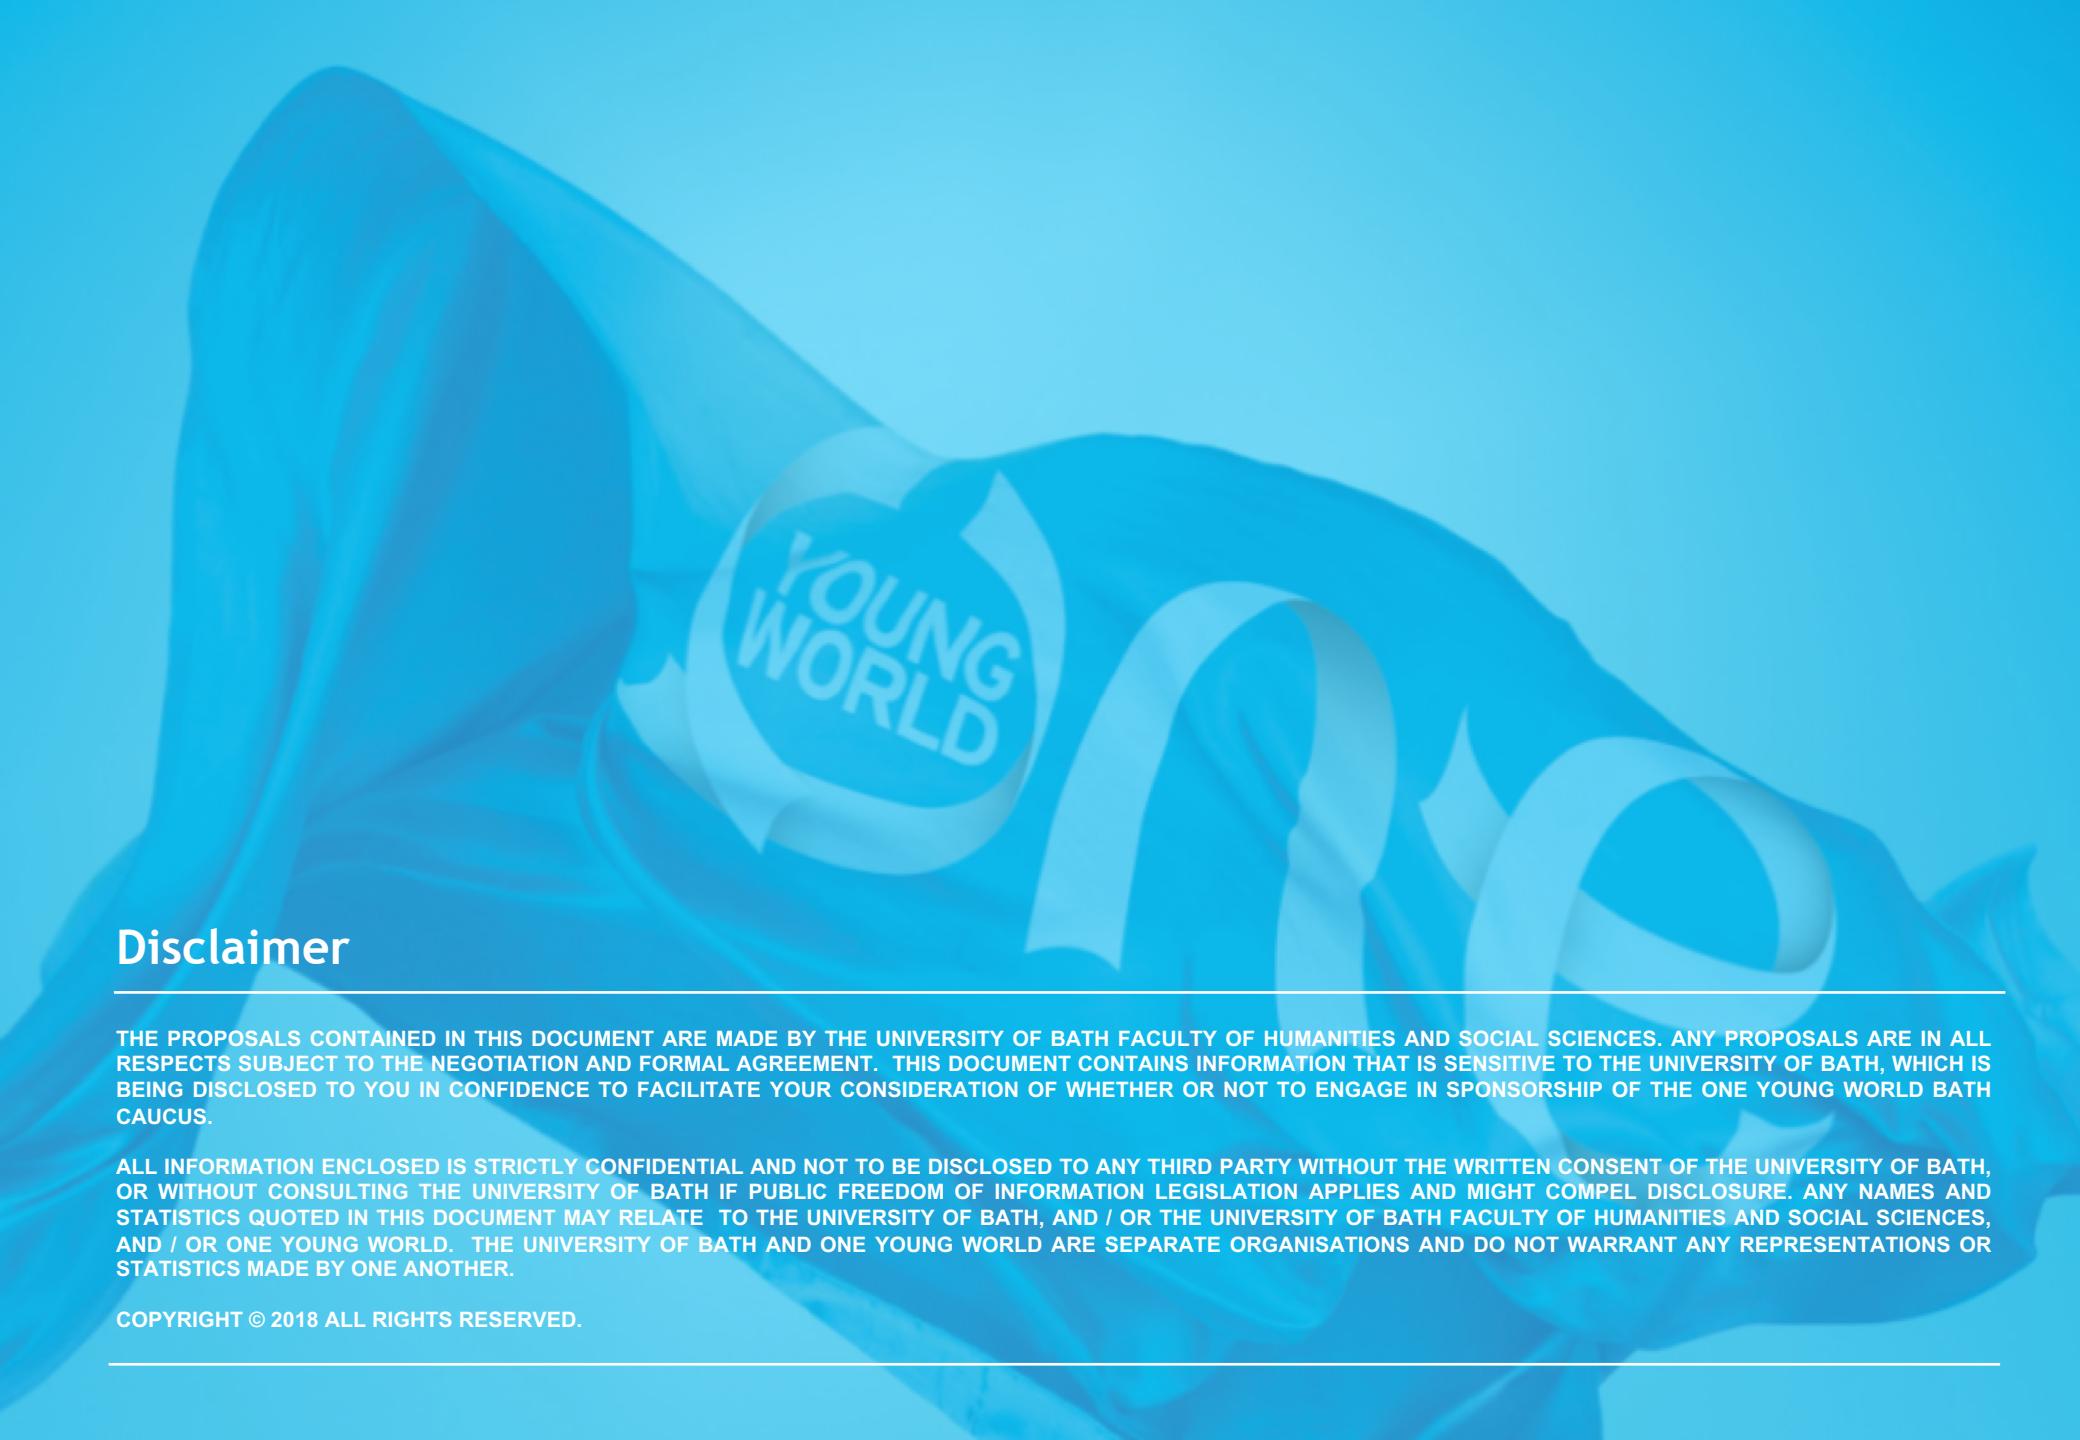

The 2nd Annual One Young World Bath Conference (Contd.)

After a brief speech by myself and Emma, Fernando returned to the stage (this time not dressed in lycra) and was joined by our pro-vice chancellor of teaching and learning Peter Bradley. Fernando talked in depth about his life journey and how the charity for which he is now patron ‘children change Colombia’ are working with children and their families to challenge poverty, inequality, discrimination and violence across Colombia. The next part of the day consisted of a networking lunch, where we also had society engagement from Global Scholar, Enactus and Bath Finance society, which flowed nicely into our final keynote session.

David Spears produced a spectacular presentation to round off the afternoon on “why businesses should solve social problems”, He drew upon examples such as M-Pesa to demonstrate how it can be advantages to both businesses and the developing world to create innovative solutions to social and environmental problems. David also cleverly linked the presentation to discuss career options and opportunities for students. For the final 15 minutes of the session, David was joined for a Q&A session by 4 student representatives, including the Presidents of the student societies; Enactus and Bath Finance Society.

Ultimately I’d like to think the day was a success with student engagement and interactions throughout. I would like to thank the people who attended on Saturday despite the horrible weather conditions and I thoroughly hope you enjoyed yourselves as much as I did. I would encourage anyone to apply for One Young World and think creatively about what projects you could bring back to Bath. Applications for the University scholarship through the SPS and Humanities department to attend next year’s OYW summit, closes on Sunday 25th March, so get writing!

Good luck and thanks for reading!

A large, semi-transparent watermark of the One Young World logo is centered on the page. The logo consists of the words "ONE YOUNG WORLD" in a white, sans-serif font, with "ONE" and "WORLD" in a larger, bolder weight than "YOUNG". The letters are arranged in three rows: "ONE" on top, "YOUNG" in the middle, and "WORLD" on the bottom. The "O" in "ONE" and the "W" in "WORLD" overlap, and there is a small circular graphic element to the left of "ONE". The background of the slide features a light blue gradient with abstract, flowing white shapes.
